An eye for an eye a tooth for a tooth?

Cham Wings Airlines Flight 6Q501 landed at Baghdad International Airport from Damascus at 12:36 a.m on 3rd January and the first to disembark were the Iranian General Qasem Suleimani and his entourage. Waiting at the bottom of the gangway was Abu Mahdi al-Muhandis an Iraqi official in charge of militias and close to Iran. Two cars carrying the group headed into the night shadowed by American MQ-9 Reaper drones. At 12:47, the first of several missiles smashed into the vehicles, engulfing them in flames and leaving 10 charred bodies inside.

Five days later Iran launched missile attacks on US targets in Iraq in response to the US assassination of their General. Iranian Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Zarif said Tehran had taken what it considered to be proportionate measures and did not seek an escalation of war.

In the intervening 5 days the world had watched and wondered whether we were on the brink of another war in the Middle East. British forces were put on alert and Navy ships sent to protect merchant vessels.

As I write things seem to have settled back into the normal state of affairs for relations between the US and Iran namely a stand off.

I'm sure we were all expecting a response from Iran, and to be honest we wouldn't be surprised if there is more to come. After all isn't this the way we expect things to work in the world - one person takes violent action and the offended responds with a similar or even more violent act?

And isn't this sort of behaviour sanctioned, or even encouraged in the Christian bible? An eye for an eye a tooth for a tooth? It's true that this verse comes from the book of Exodus in the context of rules for dealing with personal injuries inflicted on others

...if there is serious injury, you are to take life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, burn for burn, wound for wound, bruise for bruise...

But these rules were written in a cultural context where it was common for the injured party to respond with disproportionate force if they were wronged so that things often escalated. How fortunate it seems that they have not escalated in recent days, despite the alarming verbal rhetoric from both sides. By commanding that retribution should be kept to an eye for an eye God was instructing his people that punishment for an injury should be proportionate to the injury itself, and should not exceed or escalate the situation. In the Sermon on the Mount Jesus dramatically changes the challenge with these words to his disciples found in Matthew's gospel

"You have heard that it was said, 'Eye for eye, and tooth for tooth. 'But I tell you, do not resist an evil person. If anyone slaps you on the right cheek, turn to them the other cheek also. And if anyone wants to sue you and take your shirt, hand over your coat as well. If anyone forces you to go one mile, go with them two miles. Give to the one who asks you, and do not turn away from the one who wants to borrow from you.

"You have heard that it was said, 'Love your neighbour and hate your enemy.' But I tell you, love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you, that you may be children of your Father in heaven. He causes his sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sends rain on the just and the unjust. If you love those who love you, what reward will you get?

Jesus challenge is for a revolutionary different way of living, a way of life that none of us can follow without the help of God's Holy Spirit, but a way of life that if put into practice would turn our world on it's head - for the better.

Constable Country Medical Practice

Volunteer Transport Scheme:

Volunteer transport schemes exist to help patients when they need to attend the practice for an appointment. These schemes are aimed at patients who have poor mobility, are unable to use public transport and no friend or relative is available to help them. Our reception team can provide details of the schemes.

An increasing number of our patients need such assistance but our transport schemes need more volunteer drivers. If you are interested then please provide your details to the practice to be passed on to the scheme coordinators who would be happy to discuss how the scheme operates.

New Appointment System: If you need to speak to a doctor about a medical problem then you will be placed on a call back list and the receptionist will inform you if the doctor will call you either before 1pm or after 1pm. Sometimes, due to unforeseen circumstance and medical emergencies, the doctor may try to call you at a time other than specified, so it would be appreciated if patients can be as accommodating as possible.

Once you have booked a call back appointment, please keep your phone with you or remain close to a phone until you have heard from the doctor. They will try the number provided twice, but if they are unable to get through then the patient may need to rebook a call back appointment.

Training Days: Please note that the practice will be closed from 1pm on the following dates for staff training:
Thursday 6th February 2020 & Wednesday 4th March 2020

On these afternoons the Capel St Mary building will be open to enable access to the pharmacy but the Practice reception will be closed. East Bergholt reception will be open.

Please note that there will be no clinicians at either building after 1pm as they will be attending training off-site. Our phone lines will be closed for the afternoon. If you need medical assistance please contact 111. If your need is urgent then please dial 999 or attend your local A&E.

Gardening Notes

Get ready, get set...

At last spring is on the horizon and February is a chance to start getting ready for green shoots, grass growing and the inevitable rise of the evil weed.

I generally don't find pruning very complicated but there's always an exception and, for me, it's clematis. There's plenty of instruction in books and online for which group (there's three) to prune (or not) when, but since I've lost pretty much every label on my clematis plants and haven't made a note when they were flowering, pruning them is all a bit of a gamble. Still, if I do it wrong (and this is true for pretty much all gardening, it only means I'll lose a season of flowers – although I will probably face even greater confusion this time next year.

The key thing to remember is that the right time for pruning clematis depends on whether the plant flowers on old or new wood. Some produce young shoots and flower on them in the same year, while others flower on shoots grown the previous year. So watching when they flower usually tells you when to prune them.

February is the best time to prune group 3 clematis, including varieties of Clematis viticella and low growing, herbaceous varieties such as the beautiful pink Clematis 'Alionushka' in my sister's garden, which flower from summer to late autumn on stems grown this year. Because of this, you can afford to cut away a large amount of the plant's old stems down to a pair of strong buds 20-30cm above ground level. Check on them regularly to fan out and tie in new shoots as they start growing.

Summer-flowering deciduous shrubs can also be pruned now. Usually these also flower on the current year's growth and include Buddleja davidii, Ceratostigma, Hydrangea paniculata, Lavatera, Leycesteria, Perovskia and Caryopteris. As I wrote in November, I've already cut back my towering varieties of Buddleja by half, but now I'll chop them hard to 30cm, just above a healthy bud or growing shoot. Being brutal like this – stooling them, if you want to be technical about it – will stimulate better growth and flowers in the summer. If you'd like the plant to grow taller than three metres, then prune back to 60cm and if you leave the job until May you will get flowers later in the season. You might need some loppers or a sharp pruning saw for some of the thicker stems.

Do not hard prune Buddleja alternifolia or Buddleja globosa, which bloom on stems made last season and are already beginning to produce flower buds that pruning now will remove. If you grow Salix alba subsp. vitellina or Cornus sanguinea for their winter stems, stooling them will ensure you get young, colourful growth to enhance the display.

Towards the end of the month, I'll also look at some deciduous grasses in the border with several varieties of Miscanthus – 'Ferner Osten', 'Flamingo' and 'Malepartus' – adding height and structure as well as winter interest. They're looking a bit tired now, so prune back individual stems to ensure that you don't cut off the new green shoots. I can cut back clumps of Deschampsia cespitosa 'Schottland' now too, but don't do this for other deciduous grasses, like Pennisetum orientale, until late April as they produce new growth later in the season and the old stems will protect the crown until then.

Whatever you are pruning, at the end of the month plants will benefit from homemade compost or a balanced fertiliser, such as Growmore or blood, fish and bone, to feed the growth they are starting to put on.

Finally, with any time you've got left check your tools, give them some care and make sure your essential garden machinery is in working order. Start yanking up perennial weeds before the weather warms and clear away leaf litter to remove hiding places for slugs and snails. Have fun!

If you missed our first speaker evening of the year on 5 February, make a note in your diary and join us at 7.30pm on 4 March when Tom Cole talks to us about propagation, just in time for the start of a new growing season.

But how can we know the Holy Trinity exists?

The Vicar fields tough questions over a beer or two

Late on a dark Sunday evening, Antony Wilson, Dedham's vicar, is looking contemplatively into a pint of bitter. He is facing a small group of skeptics that he has asked to meet him in the Sun Inn once a month and the argument is getting lively.

It started with a question from a Christian with doubts about the book of Genesis. If the creation story is not true what should we make of it? Yes indeed, said a more hard-bitten skeptic – if the first Book of the Bible is wrong, why should we accept the rest of the Old Testament to be the Word of God?

Antony countered mildly that Genesis I was not a scientific document. It should be read more as poetry. Indeed, he said, the image of the earth before creation as “without form and void” might be seen as similar to the modern idea of the universe at the time of the Big Bang. This did not satisfy the skeptics. One thought it should be possible to be a Christian while regarding the Old Testament as a collection of myths, and tribal history. A milder skeptic who had abandoned theological studies because of his doubts, moved the conversation to the Bible's account of the creation of animals and of man. Poetic or not, this seemed to be inconsistent with Darwin's Theory of Evolution.

Antony said he accepted that Evolution took place within species, but he believed each species had been created by God. The skeptics, unsurprisingly, disagreed. However, a Humanist wisely moved the discussion on from the origins of man to questions of how men should behave. As she explained, Humanists do not generally believe in God, but they do believe in a system of ethics in line with Christian teaching.

This proved a less contentious topic. Antony said that kindness and moral behaviour was embedded in the Christian faith: why should complete unbelievers choose to be good?"

The humanist answered that it was part of her belief system, based on rational principles, that we should all behave well towards our fellow men. One former skeptic, who had recently been Confirmed as a Christian, said he thought faith had made him a better person and had certainly made him more contented. The former theological student said he had been looking for ways back to the faith despite the conflicts with science, and this was related to the question of how we should live. Even Hard Bitten conceded that a sense of right and wrong (or what the philosopher, David Hume called “benevolence”) did seem to be ingrained in many people. However, he did not think Christianity was the only, or always the best, guide to morality. For example, the Church’s past teaching on women’s rights and homosexuality was now widely questioned.

Sunday Night Skeptics

at The Sun Inn,
Dedham

for conversation and questions about faith
and reason

Antony said we should remember that moral and social ideas had been very different in past ages. This led to a short debate on the extent that church teaching should be considered as absolute (and divinely inspired) or modified by the times.

The Christians (who roughly equalled the number of skeptics at the first three meetings) wanted to emphasise the strong central core of Christian teaching. Antony said one of the most important things was trust. Hard Bitten said there were many circumstances when it would be unwise to trust others. However he then came under pressure from the group to explain how a reductionist godless view of the world could help people to live together in harmony and goodwill. He replied, rather lamely perhaps, that he had no doubt of the difference between right and wrong and could find human ideals in literature as well as philosophy.

Despite these differences, there was much common ground in later discussions about the immense cultural heritage of the Christian church and its ability to promote social cohesion. One skeptic said that Christian music, liturgy and art had been very important in her life, even though she could not believe in God and the Trinity.

Discussions about how Christian belief – or alternatives to it – could promote happiness and good behaviour proved also to be fruitful and thought provoking. Antony said that true happiness could be experienced through faith. Clearly those without faith cannot argue with that. On the other hand, one of the skeptics countered that radical uncertainty does not have to be as bleak and unsatisfying as the Christians present seemed to think. Many unbelievers, he said, delighted in the wonders of Nature; and the excitement of seeing her mysteries disrobed by science. Still, science did not reveal absolute truths.

How then, asked one of the Christians, could a person be truly satisfied if he was distrustful and unsure about everything ? Plenty to talk about over the next few beers.

A dream of the Good Life and self sufficiency

Sue starting with one of her friends.
The quest for independence from food shops has been hard work -
but worth it

Anyone in the know who sees the notice SORRY ALL GONE outside 11 Kiln Cottages in Dedham will be disappointed but not surprised.

Sue Starling's delicious eggs are a reminder of the real thing when most of us imagine that to-day's watery, supermarket version is what to expect from an egg.

Sue's eggs from her 25 hens are quickly snapped up but she is much more than an egg-lady. Kiln Cottages on Crown Street may look like a suburban terrace, but the Starlings' back garden opens out into a modest two-acre smallholding

Sue, aged 53, is a town girl from Colchester with no farming background. But when her two sons, Joshua and Thomas, were grown up, she gave up her regular job as a carer to follow a dream that she and her husband Ashley could become self-sufficient. Ashley, a former game-keeper, now works in the construction industry and is often away on contracts, leaving Sue to cope.

It started slowly. They bought the land five years ago. "First of all for the dogs and then we thought we'd get a couple of chickens and a couple of goats - I've always liked goats - and it all went a bit crazy after that."

In addition to their own two-acres they also rent land nearby and have 30 sheep, two bantams, ten yearlings, and 20 goats – seven of which are pygmies and treated as pets. The 25 hens each lay an egg a day in good weather. "On a cold day, like this they produce fewer- they are not happy birds!"

So far they just about make money from their egg sales, which almost pays for food for the animals: "We produce meat mainly for ourselves. The animals go to the abattoir in Clacton and the meat comes back frozen and jointed. We give some to family and friends - I'm only allowed to sell it to family and friends."

She even has a freezer in her conservatory as well as a large freezer in a garden shed : "We have mutton, lamb and pork chops and vegetables for ourselves: marrow, pumpkins, potatoes, runner beans (not successful this year because of the wind) beetroots, tomatoes, blackberries, raspberries, gooseberries.

“And one of the first things we did when we got the field was to plant fruit trees - apples, plums, cherries, pears but they’re not mature yet.”

So why do Sue’s eggs taste so good?

“Because the hens are outside, eating bugs and whatever they find in the grass, just walking around. Birds get easily stressed if they’re confined.”

After her job in “care” with adults and children, it is clear, Sue is now caring for animals. “It is the life – it honestly is. Caring for animals really brings out the best in people.”

She speaks of young sheep as “first time mums”. When she talks about the hard work of lambing, she says: “My ladies were kind to me by not keeping me up too late.” She loves her goats “as pets”, though she is not particularly fond of pigs. “But when you sit down and eat that pork it’s so much more delicious than what you can buy - our Oxford Sandy Blacks are a traditional pig you couldn’t get in the butcher’s.”

She is often asked: when you have delivered and brought up an animal, how can you then eat it? “I say, I love the meat so much I have no qualms whatsoever.” But there is also a feeling of respect. “We regard waste as a sin and disrespectful to animals we have cared for. So we respect what we are eating.” Sue even extends this attitude to using scraps of sheep’s wool for making elegant toy animals.

So far they do not make a profit out of their hard work “Everything we make goes straight back – and that is why my husband is still working. The eggs more or less pay for the other animals’ food. We had to buy a field shelter because we had more sheep, and this came out of my savings.

“We do what we do because we enjoy it and because of what we get out of it personally. We spend very little on food – I make my own bread if I get the time.”

Sue works phenomenally hard and admits there are days when she is tired: “But it is not overwhelming. My husband was away last year when we had the ‘Beast from the East’ with cold winds and freezing temperatures. I thought it was going to be an easy day but all my canvases had caved in with the snow so I spent the whole day repairing and fixing the poly tunnels.

“But when I finally got in and made myself a cup of coffee I felt I had really achieved something. And that’s what I get out of it .”

This account is based on research carried out by the late Phyllis Phillips, which she generously made available to me in 2007. For photographs and further information I am indebted to her husband, pharmacist Jack Phillips and to Christine Lowden (née Gooch), whose family owned the Pharmacy until 1962.

We know that there was a pharmacy in Dedham as early as 1869, when George Samuel Manthrop was listed in the first full register published by the Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain as the “already established” owner of a business in Dedham. He remained here until 1876, when he moved to Stoke Newington, London. In 1875 the chemist in Dedham was Charles John Kirkham, who was succeeded by William Hobbs Gooch in 1881. Surviving bill-heads from his dispensary dated 188_ show that as well as drugs he sold bibles and porter in casks, while psalters had been advertised at an earlier period. His business included the pharmacies in both Dedham and East Bergholt.

Gooch's Chemist in Royal Square in the late 1940s

The Gooch family owned the chemist's shop at Churchgate House in Royal Square for more than eighty years as well as the adjacent Duchy House, which was built to replace an existing cottage. The old cottage had been fronted to the north facing the square but the new house faced east, which allowed the Drift footpath to be widened to take vehicular traffic. This gave access to Duchy Cottage which they also owned.

One of William Hobbs Gooch's three sons, William Rastrick Gooch, who had gone into partnership with his father, succeeded him on his death in 1913. He continued the business with his wife Ann who was a nurse. In the winter the shop was heated by an open coal fire. The wall behind the counter was still covered by rows of small wooden drawers labelled in gold with the names of the ingredients which were used for making up prescriptions before the advent of proprietary medicines. Behind the shop was the dispensary where Mr Gooch still mixed some of his own prescriptions such as skin creams. By the time he died in 1950 he had sold the business in East Bergholt. His widow retrained as a chiropodist and kept the Dedham shop going for a further twelve years with the help of locums and managers.

Phyllis and Jack Phillips outside the Pharmacy in the early 1970s

In 1962 the business was bought by Fred Harvey who ran it with his wife Phyllis for ten years, keeping the shop essentially unchanged. I remember glass-fronted cabinets, the drawers behind the counter and in the window two of the carboys or large glass bottles filled with coloured liquid which are still to be seen in some traditional pharmacies. Medicines sold under their own name included delicious cherry cough mixture with a picture of Dedham church tower on the label. The shop was crammed with an excellent variety of merchandise and space was somehow found for scales for babies and a penny-in-the-slot machine for customers to weigh themselves.

In 1972 the shop was sold to Jack and Phyllis Phillips who ran it as a flourishing business for the next twenty-five years. Since prescriptions were no longer made up from separate ingredients and dispensing had become a matter of selecting and issuing medicines they decided to update the interior and in the 1980s carried out a complete re-fit with smart mahogany furnishings. Then in 1994 they gained much-needed extra space by moving the shop to its present location in the High Street. Here it expanded into the larger premises of the former Spearing's grocery, which was vacant after a short spell as a Martin Hogg's China Shop.

Three years later the Phillipses sold to Jayesh Kotecha, who ran the business for twenty years. He also purchased the Pharmacy in East Bergholt, bringing the two shops back into the same ownership. He subsequently combined the Pharmacy with the Dedham Post Office, which he set up in at the rear of the shop in 2005 when the Hood family's stewardship came to an end. This dual arrangement continued under the ownership of Mandeep and Pardeep Sandhu, who bought the business in 2017 but reluctantly closed the Post Office in 2019. They continue to run the Pharmacy, which remains a friendly, welcoming and greatly-valued shop in the centre of the village, as it has been for so many years.

Chris Clark, a life well lived in Dedham

Chris has been a Dedham boy all of his life. He was born in 1949 at the Anglesea Road hospital in Ipswich rather than at home because he was 1 month early, the youngest in a family of four and the only one born after the second world war.

Before the second world war his father Robert (Bob) worked at Brooks (Mistley) and was a member of the Manningtree Territorial Army. He joined up at the outbreak of war, leaving his wife, Chris' mother Dulcie (Dell) at home with three children under five. Bob was taken prisoner in the desert along with Attfield Brooks from the Mistley firm. Bob was a Cook Sergeant with responsibility for the troops' rations and told his family how he and his colleagues were captured as the German Panzer tanks appeared over the sand dunes and of the bravery of a teenage cockney soldier called 'Jonny' Johnson, armed only with a 303 rifle, who wanted to shoot at the approaching tanks. Bob was in a PoW camp for four and a half years and left when the Germans abandoned the camp in the face of the approaching Russian army. He and two other local lads walked for miles across Germany and Chris tells one of the few stories shared by his father about stealing some shoes from outside a church which turned out to belong to the local priest. His own shoes were worn through.

In common with many families, the experiences of the men on the front line were rarely spoken about. Two other vignettes from a past generation echo down the years: the prisoners in the camp said that they never heard birdsong because the Russians erected nets to trap the birds to eat as their rations were more meagre than those of other nationalities. The other was the tragic story of a Dutch traitor who gave away to the Germans the location of a diverted sewer destined to become an escape trench. He was found out because he always had plenty of cigarettes as a reward for his duplicity and was subsequently shot by his own people.

Chris's father returned to Brooks (Mistley) after the war and Chris remembers catching a bus there as a child from the Heath School (at the Heath Crossroads for those who don't remember it; the old 87A which used to come down Long Road to Bargate Lane corner and on to Lawford and Mistley) on a Saturday morning when his father used to stoke all the fires at the Maltings. When Chris's father's stepmother died, her home in Brook Street, Manningtree was cleared and Chris recalls taking four soda syphons back to the off licence which used to be in the High Street in Manningtree and getting ten bob in return. His father's preferred mode of transport at the time was a motorbike and sidecar – he bought his only new one, a Panther, in 1965, from Pride and Clarke's in London. He later graduated to a Reliant Robin, to the embarrassment of some of his family! You didn't need a full licence to drive a three wheeler.

Chris lived his early life at 1 Clayhall Cottages at the top of East Lane, which was rented from the Moorhouse family. He lived there until his family were one of the first to move into the newly built houses in Forge Street in 1950.

When it came to move from East Lane to Forge Street, the family enlisted the help of Dick Poyser, then the owner of Hill Farm in Long Road (prior to the Langridges), who brought his tractor and trailer to transport the family's worldly goods the mile and a half to Forge Street. At the time there was a shop on the corner of Bargate Lane then run by the Smiths, prior to being taken over by the Bryants.

At one stage in Forge Street there were around 100 children of school age and under! Chris recalls being collected by tractor and trailer when he was a youngster to go potato picking at Halsall's in Langham; 'Anyone for rabbit warren' shouted the farmer as he arrived at the end of Forge Street. Some thirty years late the Clark family exercised their right to buy their property in Forge Street and Chris bought number 12 with his father in 1980 for £6,750. At the time Chris was living in Newberry Cottages on Long Road whilst working for Clovers as a miller. He later took redundancy from Clovers and went to work at the Hercules Powder Company, which was later take over by Shell. After Chris's father died, Chris built a new-fangled 'Granny annex' at number 12 so that he and his wife Joan could move in and look after his mother who struggled to light the solid fuel Parkray stove on her own!

Until Chris and Joan moved out of this house to a bungalow in Colchester a few years back, their family were the longest serving residents of Forge Street to be living in the same house. Number 12 was notable for being the first house in the village to get gas, a fortnight before Arnold Hood at the Post Office because Chris had a contact at the Gas Board!

Many residents will remember Chris for his long and dedicated association firstly with the Dedham Youth Club (from 1983) and then with the Dedham Sports Club and Dedham Old Boys Football Club. The British Legion Club on the Duchy Field was originally the Reading Room which was built in 1911: the occasion of the formal opening of the Reading Room saw the first telegram ever to be sent to Dedham. A new flat roofed Sports Club building was built on the same site in 1969 by Keeble and Bush, Langham builders, and opened by Bobby Robson, the Ipswich Town Football Club manager.

During the late 1980s and early 1990s Chris, along with the late Peggy and Les Brookes, was the driving force behind the Dedham fete, primarily organised to raise funds for a new Sports Club building, opened in 1991, by the then Anglia TV celebrity cook Patrick Anthony and still going strong. Chris recalls that Mr Anthony was entertained to lunch by Trevor Gilbert in one of our local restaurants as a thank you for his services. It is unclear who paid!

In 1991 Chris set up the Carpet Bowls Club, also still going strong!

Chris has lived a largely blameless life.....except for one or two minor brushes with the long arm of the law! In 1970 he apparently crossed the central double white lines on the old A12 when overtaking a tractor and was fined £15. The fine was probably at the top end of the range because he left the police officer who pulled him over in no doubt as to the unfairness of his actions given that three cars in front of him which performed the same manoeuvre were not stopped! Around ten years ago he was travelling through Newton Green, near Sudbury, in pursuit of a spare part for the Sports Club's grass cutting tractor when he was admonished for travelling at 34mph in a 30mph limit. He subsequently completed a 'speed awareness' course.

Many local friends will know that Chris has been diagnosed with a terminal illness.....but that was five years ago. He tells me that he asked his consultant for fifteen extra years and he looks set to achieve this!

Medical cannabis: weeding out the truth

'Medical cannabis' describes any cannabis-based medicine used to relieve symptoms in a medical condition. All are based on a part, or parts of the cannabis plant which contains hundreds of natural chemicals, the two most important being cannabidiol (CBD) and tetrahydrocannabinol (THC). CBD does not have the psychogenic ('high') effects associated with cannabis. Medical cannabis has had only limited success in the treatment of multiple sclerosis, severe cerebral palsy and cancer. The past seven years has seen much research into the potential benefits and safety of cannabis (CBD, not THC), in the treatment of epilepsy.

Most research has been undertaken using the 'randomised controlled trial' (RCT), the gold standard when assessing the effectiveness and safety of new medicines before they can be prescribed to patients. RCTs have been undertaken in the UK, the rest of Europe and the USA in two severe types of epilepsy. I helped design and participated in two trials in children in the UK. Results of these trials showed that CBD (called Epidyolex by the pharmaceutical company), was statistically significantly more effective than placebo in reducing the frequency of epileptic seizures. There are many non-pharmaceutical grade medical cannabis products, most of which contain significant amounts of THC (far more than in Epidyolex), as well as impurities and none have undergone an RCT. It is these products, obtained from many countries, that families want to give their children with severe epilepsy and which has led to intense media-coverage. Clearly, there must be justifiable concern over their safety, particularly in children. At the moment, none can be approved and licenced by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) in the USA and the European Medicines Agency (EMA) in UK/Europe. Epidyolex was approved for limited use in the treatment of children and adults with two severe types of epilepsy in 2018 (USA) and 2019 (UK/Europe). The National Institute for Health and Care Excellence (NICE) recently 'allowed' Epidyolex to be prescribed in these epilepsies. However, significant obstacles may still prevent it being prescribed to eligible patients. Consequently, confusion and concern continue and particularly over non-RCT tested cannabis in the treatment of epilepsy.

(I will discuss drug trials and medical cannabis in more detail at a Church fund-raising talk in Stratford St Mary on 28th March 2020).

Stour Choral Society Spring Concert

Stour Choral Society will be performing Handel's Messiah on Saturday 28th March at Mistley Parish Church starting at 2.30 pm

Don't miss this exciting event when the choir will be performing under the baton of Musical Director Susie Hyman. Soloists will be Lindsay Gowers (soprano), Anna Maria Hyman (mezzo soprano), Mitesh Khatri, (tenor) and Peter Grevatt (bass), Organist, Stephen Smith, trumpeters Glyn Sweeting and Jonathan Abbott and Timpanist Ben Steinitz.

Tickets, priced £12 will be available from Howells Hardware Store, High Street, Manningtree, Choir members, Composed in just twenty-four days, Handel's Messiah is a work of sustained inspiration, power and seemingly inexhaustible invention. More than 250 years have passed since its first performance, yet its status as one of the great icons of European music remains undiminished, and it continues to speak to millions of people of many cultures and faiths around the world.

Accompanied by the Kingfisher Sinfonietta, Clacton Choral will perform Parts Two and Three of this magnificent work, on Saturday 4th April 2020 in St.Paul's Church, Church Road, Clacton on Sea CO15 6AU.

Part Two is the dramatic heart of the work, telling of Christ's passion, crucifixion, resurrection and ascension. Here we find a wide range of emotional expression, from the crowd's derisive taunts in 'He trusted in God', to the heart-breaking alto aria, 'He was despised', which will be sung by Sarah Stephens. Bass soloist Peter Grevatt expresses the fierce rage in 'Why do the nations?' and the tenor aria is sung by Michael Bell in the moving 'Thou shalt break them'. This part ends on a gloriously optimistic note, with trumpets, drums and chorus blazing out their triumphant 'Hallelujah!'

Part Three consists entirely of commentary, principally on the resurrection and the theme of Christian redemption. In a work that abounds in superb music, this section contains some of Handel's most inspired writing, beginning with the radiant soprano aria, 'I know that my redeemer liveth' which will be performed by Beverly Lockyer. Equally superb is the bass aria, 'The trumpet shall sound', with its spectacular trumpet solo. However, it is in the towering final choruses, 'Worthy is the Lamb' and 'Amen', that Handel truly surpasses himself with music that carries all before it, in an exultant affirmation of faith. Throughout, Handel's writing for orchestra and solo voices is masterly, the fruits of a lifetime's musical experience. Arguably, though, it is the choruses that raise Messiah onto a different plane, thanks to Handel's unerring ability to grasp the dramatic potential of each text and the astonishing power and variety of his choral writing.
